I thoroughly enjoyed Redeeming Creation. It is a good mix of investigating what the Bible says about creation (not just a few verses, but really trying to get at the purpose of creation) and also science and the history of creation. Even though it was written nearly 20 years ago, it does not seem to have lost any of its relevance or poignancy.

The authors of Redeeming Creation: A Biblical Basis for Environmental Ethics are not clergy or theologians (in the academic sense) but they are teachers in a Christian community. In the preface of the book they state that their goal is "to reveal the joy and beauty of the world around us, with humanity's rightful responsibilities for its care, through an understanding of who God is to us as Creator..." (p. 11).

A Biblical Basis for Creation Care. There is no conflict between these statements: the Earth belongs to God by creation and to us by delegation; God has not handed His creation over to us in such a way as to relinquish His ownership, but He has delegated to us the responsibility of looking after it on His behalf.
